Show Me

Season 3 of Flatland's video series
Wednesdays on flatlandkc.org

Flatland's video series Show Me returns for season three as we highlight four more influencers of Kansas City's cultural identity. From actor Jason Sudeikis and design company Porter Teleo, to artist Susan Lordi Marker and filmmaker Kevin Willmott, each episode is a love letter to Kansas City as their local pride and national ambition is set to the musical backdrop of four local bands.

The four-part series runs consecutive Wednesdays at flatlandkc.org, through Feb. 21, culminating in a 30-minute special Thursday, Feb. 22 at 7:30 p.m. on KCPT.

Jason Sudeikis: Raised in Overland Park, Kansas, Jason Sudeikis launched his career in the improv scene before landing a sketch-writing job for Saturday Night Live. He's gone on to star in television shows and feature films, but returns to his hometown for philanthropic events.

Porter Teleo: Kelly Porter and Bridgett Cochran combine fine art and high design to create custom hand-painted wallcoverings and fabrics for their company, Porter Teleo. Made in downtown Kansas City, their products garner national attention, with showrooms in LA, Miami and Chicago.

Kevin Willmott: Filmmaker and University of Kansas professor Kevin Willmott has made a name for himself over decades of screenwriting, producing and directing films. Hailing from Junction City, Kansas, Willmott has worked with the likes of Martin Sheen, Oliver Stone and Spike Lee.

Susan Lordi Marker: Artist Susan Lordi Marker creates each of her Willow Tree figurines by hand in her studio in Kansas City. The nationally-known sculptures are hand-painted and reflect the wide variety of life's moments and emotions.
